

Longing For A New Day

America lost her senses
In the aftermath of the horror of September 11
That evil brainchild of al-Qaida's Ossama
But she is finally on the way to a recovery
After the election of President Barack Hussien Obama.

America's blinded senses
Refused to put on lenses
That could help her distinguish
Between perceived and real enemies
When the rage of a giant
Spreads like an uncontrollable fire
It consumes anything standing in its way
Oddly this madness has not even spared America's soul.

Genuine fear and insecurity
Exploited by greed and empire-making grand schemes
Kept the cauldron of fire raging for eight years
Resulting in one horrendous mess
But America has now learned a lesson
And has eagerly worn her lenses
To see through the muck.

Change is clearly in the air
Blowing across this massive land
It is ringing in the hearts of the people
From coast to coast and from sea to sea
They are longing for a new day to begin.
